Sydney-based service FlexiSchools earns position as finalist in the Australian round of global business excellence awards

Sydney-based technology service FlexiSchools was today named a finalist for the Second Annual Dell/EXCOM Small Business Excellence Award in Australia. FlexiSchools was chosen from a field of 150 businesses and joins nine other Australian companies vying for the technology-focused award. FlexiSchools is a division of The Scotney Group; Australia's leading provider of on-line ordering technology for schools and corporates.

The Scotney Group's Managing Director Geoff Austen said that FlexiSchools being named a finalist in the Australian leg of the 2009 Global Dell Small Business Excellence Award was recognition for the innovative way that the company's technology is making life easier for schools and parents.

"When implemented in the canteen, the system can save up to two hours a day, reduces the amount of cash on hand, makes it easier for parents to order and pay, and encourages healthy eating", he said.

"Many of our school partners are extending the service to include other ancillary services provided by the school such as Uniform Shop and Text Books".

"Our commitment to customer service and security gives parents and school service providers peace of mind"

About FlexiSchools

The FlexiSchools service significantly enhances the way canteen other services are provided to the school community. FlexiSchools partners with school and parent associations to provide a simple and efficient way of receiving, processing and fulfilling daily orders and payment over the internet. The web-based system has been built in-house and includes an advanced Customer Relationship Management (CRM) tool for dealing quickly and professionally with customer (parent) enquiries.
